Summary: What if Hiccup hadn't survived the battle with the Green Death? Poem for this possibility.

Goodbye Hiccup

A/N: This wasn't what I originally planned, and by the time I realized I'd written a rhyming eulogy, I liked it too much to go back.

>He tried,

He tried to fit in, to make friends,

He tried to prove himself,

But always screwed up in the end.

>At first, he tried,

And failed every time.

He cried bitterly,

But now he's all cried dry.

* * *

>And no one wants to be his friend,

No one will reach out to him,

No one gives him the time of day,
Except a dragon.

* * *

>And now Hiccup soars over Berk,
The wounds have healed, but the scars remain,
Reminding everyone that this awkward screw-up,
Could come out again.

>And then the young outcast,
Killed a dragon they call the Green Death,
But it seemed a happy ending was not in store,
He fell off his dragon and breathed his last breath.

>It all happened so quickly,
It all happened so fast,
They all hung their heads in grief,
Watching as the boy breathed his last.

>His funeral was nice,
They shot flaming arrows into the sky,
It's said Stoick still grieves,
And shamelessly cries.

>No one had the chance to make things right,
No one could make it up to him,
The boy lived and died,
His best friend a dragon.

>Goodbye, Hiccup,
You've been a brave lad,

I'm sorry you never got,
To make things right with your dad.

* * *

>Goodbye, Hiccup,

I'm sorry your dad ignored you.

I'm sorry you had to die,

When everyone most needed you.

* * *

>Goodbye Hiccup,

Snotlout's feeling guilty about being such a jerk,

Goodbye, Hiccup,

The screw-up and the hero of Berk.

* * *

>We barely knew you,

Before we had to say goodbye.

I'm sorry, Hiccup.

I'm sorry we never noticed you try.

End
file.
